State Auditor Julie Blaha Wins Second Debate on TPT's Almanac

“Tonight was an opportunity to talk about local government and how much it matters. Regardless of how often my MAGA Republican opponent intentionally misleads voters, I’ll continue talking about the actual role of the Minnesota State Auditor;” – Auditor Blaha

ST. PAUL, Minn – State Auditor Julie Blaha clearly won the second debate against her MAGA Republican opponent tonight on Almanac. Over the course of the debate it was evident that her opponent, Ryan Wilson, either has no idea what the Office of the State Auditor actually does or he’s intentionally misleading voters. Either way, that’s a prescription for losing a debate.

“Tonight was an opportunity to talk about local government and how much it matters. Regardless of how often my MAGA Republican opponent intentionally misleads voters, I’ll continue talking about the actual role of the Minnesota State Auditor,” Auditor Blaha said.

Auditor Blaha also reminded voters of her work to protect our freedom to make local decisions, because in difficult times local government keeps us together.

“Remember, when local government doesn’t work, we don’t get out of our driveways in the winter,” Auditor Blaha said. “Our role, at the Office of the State Auditor, is to provide data to local governments so they have the tools to make the best decisions for their communities, and not look for the next headline to promote a political agenda.”
